JULIA MAE 460 (Pommert 1953)

This soft, pale rose-pink will rank with Annemae as our two best introductions. Will open 8 to 9 florets on a good wiry spike. $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 inch florets, with 20 to 22 buds. Height 60 to 66 inches. Early mid-season. Will make lots of bulblets that germinate easily.

Excellent keeper. Opens well when cut in the very tight bud, and holds both size and color well to the top bud. Excellent under artificial light. We predict Julia Mae will be an outstanding exhibition and commercial glad.

The picture at the left was taken a week after the spike was cut with 3 florets open, and kept in cold storage.

As to the ability of Julia Mae as a show glad, "let us look at the record" :

American Home Magazine Award - NAGC Pacific International Show, Auburn 1951.

In 1953 Julia Mae won one or more blue ribbons at each of the following shows:

NAGC Pacific International, Sacramento

Western International, Yakima

Washington State, Tacoma

Pacific Northwest, Everett

Also Division Champion in Amateur Division at the big Yakima Show.

"Julia Mae turned out to be the best on my whole trial plot." (Al Moses, N.Y.)

"Julia Mae is tops." (Lloyd Weeks, Oregon)

Large $1.00 each, 10 for $8.00; medium 75¢ each, 10 for $6.00; small 50¢ each, 10 for $4.00. Bulblets 4 for 25¢.

A FEW POINTERS FOR RAISING BETTER GLADS

Plant your glads in an open sunny place. Glads planted in the shade may not bloom, or will produce very poor spindly spikes and the foliage will be narrow and grassy. The only exception to this is in the southwest where the hot summer sun may burn the spikes. Here a certain amount of shade may be beneficial during the heat of the day. Late shades, old camouflage netting or cheese-cloth may be used for this. But in Pacific coastal regions, glads need all the sun they can get.

To get good growth and fine spikes there must be plenty of soil moisture. But glads do not like a poorly drained soil. "Wet feet" will surely cause one or more diseases.

Glads like a good, rich soil. They will do well in all types of soil from clay to sand, provided there is a reasonable amount of humus and plant food. If your soil is heavy, work in liberal amounts of well rotted humus, peat moss, or well-rotted cow manure. This is best worked into the soil in the fall, but may be done in the spring if discretion is used. If you feel that commercial fertilizer is a necessity in your garden, it is best to use only a small amount at planting time and use the remainder as a side-dressing during the growing season.

If you want some really tall show-spikes, try side-dressing your plants just as the tip of the spike is about to appear from the leaves. Fish-meal, tankage, liquid fish fertilizer, may be used sparingly, - or pulverized sheep guano may be used rather liberally. Cultivate into the soil and give a thorough soil soaking.

Do not apply fertilizer as a side-dressing to glads, or any other plants, when the soil is quite dry. First have the soil moist for about 24 hours. If a chemical fertilizer is watered into a soil with thirsty plants, - the plants will take up so much moisture and dissolved chemicals that burning of the plant will often result.

Store your gladiolus bulbs in a dry, airy location, - with a temperature as near 50 degrees as possible. The Oregon State College has made rather extensive experiments in temperatures for correct storage. While the control of one disease is best obtained at a temperature of 60°, and the control of another is best obtained at 40°, - a temperature of 50 degrees seems to be the best and most effective median temperature.

Complete instructions for planting, growing and storing glads will be sent out with all orders.

JOIN A GLADIOLUS SOCIETY - By becoming a member of a state or national society and reading its publications, you will learn about new varieties, new methods of growing and disease control, all about show winners, etc. Most states have one or more active societies. If you would like the name of the secretary of the society in your state, just drop us a card and we will be pleased to send it to you.

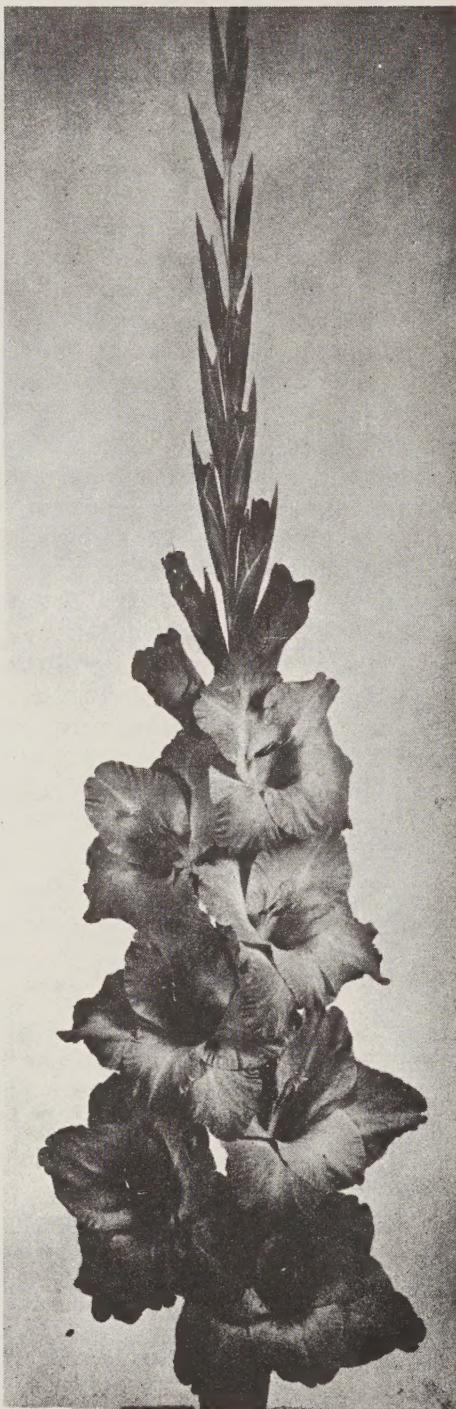

The three national societies are:

The North American Gladiolus Council,
Henry S. Sentman, Membership Secretary,
820 Ontario St.,
Havre de Grace, Maryland
The New England Gladiolus Society,
Membership Secretary,
Horticultural Hall, Boston 15, Mass.
The Canadian Gladiolus Society,
Mrs J. A. Carlton, secretary,
166 Willow Road,
Guelph, Ontario, Canada
